THE OFFICE ENVIRONMENT

The office environment simply put is a workspace in which employees carry out their daily tasks. The office environment setup is the foundation on which good performance is laid. A proper work environment is carefully designed according to distinct zones that help staff perform optimally. These include the Reception, Open office, Private office, Meeting area and break room. All five are paramount to achieving an office that runs seamlessly. Beyond the zones is the atmosphere within the zones, one that is free to express, where all staff feel comfortable and valued. All these elements come together consolidating a healthy, productive work environment. These are the principles that guide us in AFP, we strive to consistently create intelligent workspace designs.

The reception is where the visitors of an office or organisation are received, this is usually the first physical interaction one has with the establishment. The reception is the point of collective first experiences and impressions, hence why it must be as inviting and hospitable as possible. Here the company's best attributes must be at the forefront as the reception is not only a space for receiving guests, but also a medium for inquiry. A good reception should have the company or brand information (representing the brand's identity), a workstation for the receptionist, which is usually integrated into the reception desk, a waiting area for guests' ideal and literature/ handouts that offer more information about the institution.

CUSTOM RECEPTION DESKS

A reception desk that properly represents the office or brand and its values is always the best foot forward as it is one of the first interactions a client has inside the building. We offer the service of manufacturing custom reception desks that properly represent and adhere to the brand's principles and identity (with options to include fully functional workstations for the receptionists or lobbyists).

The open (or open plan) office is a large workspace setup that accommodates a sizable number of staff and their workstations with little to no use of walls to divide or separate spaces into allotted rooms. This system of office was introduced in the early 20th century with the incentive to promote teamwork and ease communication. The reduced use of walls and barriers creates a feeling of freedom amongst staff encouraging creativity and expression. With the minimal approach to partition walls, office construction costs are reduced, this has also resulted in the increased demand for leased office spaces as with the open plan office system, setting up a firm is quicker and more straightforward.

PARTITION SHELF

A truly elegant way to divide or demarcate spaces, our partition system offers the option of separating spaces and functions without closing them up entirely into rooms, allowing for a more open environment. The partition system is a highly configurable modular make-up consisting of cabinets, drawers and shelves all consolidating to form a contemporary room dividing unit that is freestanding and accessible from all four sides. With our partition system, there is no permanence in spatial allocation. The units can be moved whenever the need arises allowing freedom and dynamicity in the office layout. It is also useful to arrange and organise office documents and stationaries.

Below are the three sizes that make up the partition system, they all share the same height and depth only varying in width and metal frame configuration. The lower section of the partition shelf is made up of cabinets. The largest size is composed of two columns of drawers and two doored cabinets, the next size is with one column of drawers and two doored cabinets and the smallest has only one doored cabinet.

In cases where there is need to carry out confidential or sensitive assignments , a private office is required. This is a moderately sized room with enclosed walls that offer auditory and visual obscurity. As its name denotes it is specific for restricted information and endeavours. This office is isolating and creates a mild impression of inaccessibility hence why it is typically reserved for administrative or supervising staff. The private office gives an added layer of professionalism, having a private reserved area to engage with clients or business partners away from the general population. Working in a private office also eliminates needless/ avoidable distractions or interferences ensuring better focus and in turn, productivity.

GLASS PARTITION

Perfect for situations in which the space is to be separated but not obscured. The glass partition is a system of extruded metal frames and glass sheets. It is a light, elegant way to divide spaces into well defined semi-private rooms, offering adequate sound insulation without the cluster of opaque walls. The partition frames are available in different colours and glass sheets in different types from smart (which is designed to automatically alternate between clear and various levels of milky) to frosted and many more tints, these are sourced from our sister company Abumet

One of the types of non-integrated office desk offered by AFP is the linear desk, as the name indicates it is a worktable in which all its parts are arranged on one axis/line (all underneath the tabletop). Its parts include the tabletop and drawer box.

LINEAR DESK

ANGLE DESK

The other type is the Angle desk; in this case the general table shape is like that of an "L". Depending on the design, the shape is achieved with the tabletop alone but in this case the drawer box is rotated 90 degrees from the tabletop to achieve the desired shape.

More often than not, matters of great importance are best discussed face to face, this allows ideas to be expressed in real time in their raw, most true form. Conference being an umbrella term for a gathering of people can be split into two sections: meeting room and conference hall. The Meeting room is an area designated for dissemination, presentations and deliberation with/ amongst groups of people usually on a small scale while the Conference hall is larger with capacities to accommodate more people. Both the meeting room and conference hall make provision for sitting and electronic devices to aid in visual and auditory presentations.

CONFERENCE HALL

A Conference hall is a large room used to host a multitude of people for occasions, typically it is split into two areas, the stage; the point from which the public is addressed and the auditorium; which is the area the audience sits. Conference halls have several uses, they could be used as venues for education: lecture halls, governmental activities: Congress Hall or court rooms, entertainment: theatres and so on. We carefully design these spaces to be awe inspiring with planned out sitting arrangements that allow many spectators easy access in and quick exit out.

We offer different levels of flexibility in our conference hall designs ranging from 'free', which typically will be fitted with light movable tables and sleek plastic chairs or more elaborate visitor chairs which can easily be moved or arranged according to the immediate need - To 'fixed' which, similar to the scene displayed, most of the furnishings are immobile after installation.

After several hours of hard work everyone deserves a break now and again. It is important just as any other section of the office to have a space designated for interludes. Several studies show that taking regular intervals during work contributes positively to brain function and productivity. Having the space to calm one's thoughts provides the clarity to look at situations or problems better thus proffering better solutions. This area should include a relaxed- work area; here there is more room to kick back and work on a mobile device or lounge and take a nap if needed and Lunch area to get the most important work fuel; which is definitely coffee.
